

My Tweet of the Week

I would like to share the book "Frindle" with all of you. "Frindle" was written by Andrew Clements, and it's a very interesting story about a boy named Nick Allen and his teacher Mrs. Granger. It takes place in a town called Westfield, in the United States, a few years ago. In the story, Nick is in fifth grade, and Mrs. Granger teaches him English. He learns how new words make it into the dictionary, and decides to test this theory by inventing a new word. His teacher doesn't seem very happy about it...or is she? Will his new word "frindle" catch on? You will have to read the book to find out.

Nick is very creative. In the story, he is always thinking of interesting ways to spice up their day and bring adventure to the classroom. For example, in third grade, he inspired everyone to turn the classroom into a giant beach. In fifth grade, he decided to create a new word, and see if it would catch on. He also used his creativity to get everyone together to improve school cafeteria food. If he wasn't creative, this story would never have happened at all. Nick reminds me of Goob, because he made a plan for something, and he followed through.